About the Australian Pig Veterinarians Group

The Australian Pig Veterinarians (APV) is a special interest of the Australian Veterinary Association (AVA) and focusses on preventative medicine, and promotes a holistic view of veterinary science, particularly in regards to pigs in their environments.

Veterinarians that work with pigs make a very important and global contribution to society by ensuring adequate and safe food is available, while still maintaining the health and welfare of pigs. In addition, pig veterinarians are extending the scope and delivery of veterinary science by becoming involved in training programs for pig producers, quality assurance programs, and establishing and managing production systems and global disease prevention.

About the APV Conference

This year we are heading to Geelong, Victoria for the Australian Pig Veterinarians Annual Conference.

After a two-year hiatus from meeting in person we are bringing the industry back together for two full days of science, social events and an enhanced trade offering.

The Australian Pig Veterinarians Group brings together their specialised profession with high quality CPD and delves into the questions encountered in the veterinary practice and industry today. It is an event not to be missed!

Take this opportunity to finally see your fellow pig vets face-to-face, step back from work for a few days, and maintain professional skills and relevance in a changing world.

Keynote speaker

Dr Clayton Johnson, DVM

Dr Clayton Johnson is a partner and veterinarian at Carthage Veterinary Service, Ltd. Located in Carthage, Illinois. Dr Johnson attended the University of Illinois, College of Veterinary Medicine, receiving a Doctor of Veterinary Medicine, continuing on to complete the Executive Veterinary Program.

Dr Johnson's international reputation is built upon a foundation of creating bio-economic models of PRRSv and PEDv management strategies.
